

Studying abroad brings along its own challenges and experiences. You may be interested in studying abroad due to an academic cluster at your university or just want to check out another country and learn another language. When living in a new country you will need to learn a new language and understand the culture.

//

The culture of the country you will be studying in plays a role in the interaction of the people with one another and what kind of food will be available to you. When studying abroad you can determine if you are going with a group of people or alone. There are pros and cons to studying abroad with other people you know, as well as if you went alone. Keep in mind you will experience culture shock, so be prepared for that as well. This site will look at studying in Germany.

Studying in Germany offers a lot of great opportunities. There are over 300 institutions of higher education located all over the country, including universities, universities of applied science (so called Fachhochschulen) and colleges of music and fine arts. This provides the students with a wide range of different subjects. One of the main aspects of German higher education is fundamental research.

Elite scientists from all over the world come to Germany to pursue their research projects. At the same time they work as teachers and therefore can pass the newest results and theories onto the students. But studying in Germany is not only beneficial for your education. It also allows you to collect many new experiences. Starting with learning a new language to making new friends right through to developing self-confidence and independence, studying in Germany is an experience that will stay with you through your whole life. Not only is Germany the country of poets and philosophers, there are also a lot of architectural, geographical and gastronomic treasures like Neuschwanstein castle (Cinderella's castle), the Black Forest and Sauerbraten. Studying in Germany will be the adventure of your life!
